- Moved by the distressing situation created by the embargo on our foreign export for cotton, Governor Colquitt has issued a call for the legislature to convene in extraordinary session on August 24, for the purpose of amendng the existing warehouse law and to take whatever action may be necessary to assist the farmers in holding their crop. The nature of the governor's pro-posed recommendations for amending the warehouse law has not been made public. Many public warehouses are mous amount of space, and it will be caped into several weeks before the necessary amount of room is provided.

- Washington, August 23: War in Europe promises to hold congress in session indefinitely. Commerce, which the war has stricken, is the principal subject with which congress is con-cerned. Following passage of the war risk insurance bill, a proposal for the government to organize a corporation for the purchase of ships to engage in trans-oceanic trade will be taken. In the senate consideration will be given during the week to the bill to give Federal license to cotton warehouses. Amendments are pending to include topacco and naval stores warehouses and canned salmon warehouses. Consider ation of the Clayton anti-trust bill also will be resumed. An effort will be made by the house insular affairs committee to get a special rule for consideration of the bill, looking to Philippine inde pendence. Chairman Jones of the in-sular committee and Manuel Quezon, resident commissioner of the Philipcongress, say that unles there is immediate action, the wheels of the Philippine government machinery will stop because of the paralyzed condition of the island's trade with Europe. The Ferris waterpower conservation bill is the pending regular business of the house.

The talents of the editors of prognostications were not so wild as were the prognostications of two years ago; but the opinion that Blease was defeated seemed to be general. The principal fear expressed was the possibility that there would be two "Blease men" in the second race.

The state and Federal candidates ave done more newspaper advertisng this year than ever before. Exept in the case of Blease and the Blease and anti-Blease candidates for governor, the newspapers generally have left the candidates to do their own fighting. We have not agreed with the editor The Yorkville Enquirer on things political for two or three years, but we have respected him all along for his honesty and we have admired his course n : postion in which we fe't that he did not rightfully belong. He has conducted his paper cleanly, and he has not forced his own views on the public in an objectionable manner. He has cheerfully conceded the right of others to differ with him. In the current issue of his paper he has an editorial which pleases us greatly And we may say, with due modesty that what the editor of The Enquirer says about himself the editor of the Daily Mail might say about himself .-

Now while we feel very much com plimented at the sincere approva with which the Mail reproduces what we had to say last Friday with reference to the conduct of The Enquirer we beg leave to call its attention to the fact that it has said some things it would find difficult to explain. No complaint, neighbor, and no reproach for we assure you that we feel just as kindly toward you as we did in the days when honest, able and fearless old Carpenter held your editorial columns up to a standard that has seldom been excelled. We take all you say above in good faith, and it pleases us to do so. But if The Enquirer has been honest, clean, considerate of the rights of others and has refrained from forcing its views on the public in an objectionable manner, how could you disagree with it in things political, and how could you feel that it was in a position in which it does not laily papers were on yesterday devoted rightfully belong? You have us puzzled. Maybe however, you have in mind the difference between reputation and character, remembering that tation is what people say he is. There tor of much moral force, who was not very particular about his methods: but whose most striking characteristic was desire to compell other papers to chime in with and echo him whether they felt that way or not. This editor gets to be, and although he knew there were two sides to every question, during the early days of the Tillman movement. Feeling ran high and within certain limits the words Tillnanite and anti-Tillmanite served as much as epithets as well as adjectives descriptive of political sentiment. The colitical complexion of The Enquirer We discussed things as we saw them without first ascertaining whether any particular sentiment or observation quarter. This editor used to reproduce comments from the different papers, and along with the credit would designate the alleged politics of the paper, and that designation was usually made in such manner as seemed to suit his notion at the moment. For instance some days this paper was designated thus: "Yorkville Enquirer (Tillmanite):" sometimes "Yorkville Enquirer, (Conservative);" and sometimes "York Enquirer (neutral);" and Hamburg-American liners to be used tries to allow themselves to become at other times "Yorkville Enquirer, returns." All the campaigners made their usucentered in Mr. Hutchison's fight against Messrs. Thos. F. McDow and J. S. Brice because of their alleged bossism, etc.

Mr. Hutchison made the same speed he has been making from the beginginned its first bale of the season, last ning and fired off all the additional material that has been accumulating from day to day to the great satisfaction of those who came out especially on that account.

The principal reply to Mr. Hutchison was made by Mr. Cherry, who read a letter from Mr. J. L. Spratt endorsing the caucus, and who argued that Mr. Hutchison's only grievance was that he himself had not been one of the caucus nominees. The crowd called upon Mr. Cherry to read Mr. Brice's letter to the caucus nominees and Mr. Cherry failed to do so. The most important matter in his estimation seemed to be not the contents of the letter but how Mr. Hutchison had gotten his information on the subject. He called upon Mr. Hutchison to tell; but Mr. Hutchison did not respond and the Crawford. crowd was evidently of the opinion that the matter was not material. Congressman Finley addressed the meeting after the other candidates had spoken. He reviewed his record in congress and replied to certain arguments of Mr. Stevenson as to the tolls repeal question, rivers and harbors appropriations, etc. Referring to the vacancy in the local postmastership, e said that there was nothing unusua about the continuance of a vacancy for four months; that he had known them to continue for four years. He said that there had been a number of applications; that he had not had time to give them full consideration, but that he would attend to the matter before the expiration of his present term Referring to the fight at Pageland, he said that he did not strike Mr. Stevenson from behind and he struck him on the right instead of his left ear; also that the blow was given in resentment of an insult and he had no apologies t offer.

A considerable portion of the crowd lected are not changed by the official left after the conclusion of Mr. Hutchison's speech and toward the end of the meeting the audience had dwindled from several hundred to only forty or
